ABSTRACT:

An apparatus comprising a storage medium and a communicatively coupled processor are presented. The storage medium has stored therein a plurality of executable instructions which, when executed, implement an information server which, upon receiving a request including a resource identifier for an information page that may or may not exist, constructs and issues commands to retrieve the requested information and dynamically generates instructions to create the requested information page for provision to a requesting client if the information page does not exist.

ABSTRACT:

A client program executes in conjunction with a web browser on a user computer. The client program captures submitted form data from HTTP requests and presents the user with the option of resubmitting the form data to related web sites based upon information transmitted to the client program from a metadata server. A processing engine, located in the client program or on the metadata server, extracts the submitted data from an HTTP request and creates data resubmission blocks using the extracted data. The data resubmission blocks replace related forms on related web sites but incorporate the extracted data. Instructions based upon which the processing engine extracts the data and creates data resubmission blocks are stored on the metadata server. The data resubmission blocks are displayed to the user through the web browser and can be submitted by the user without the need to re-enter data, in order to resubmit the extracted data to the related web sites. In a preferred embodiment, the system is used to capture a query submitted to a search engine of one web site, and to present the user an option to submit the same query to the search engines of one or more related web sites. When the user conducts a search of a merchant's web site, the related web sites may be those of merchants that carry the same or similar products.

ABSTRACT:

A computer-implemented service recommends products or other items to a user based on a set of items known to be of interest to the user, such as a set of items currently in the user's electronic shopping cart. In one embodiment, the service identifies items that are currently in the user's shopping cart, and uses these items to generate a list of additional items that are predicted to be of interest to the user, wherein an additional item is selected to include in the list based in-part upon whether that item is related to more than one of the items in the user's shopping cart. The item relationships are preferably determined by an off-line process that analyzes user purchase histories to identify correlations between item purchases. The additional items are preferably displayed to the user when the user views the contents of the shopping cart.

ABSTRACT:

A recommendations service recommends items to individual users based on a set of items that are known to be of interest to the user, such as a set of items previously purchased by the user. In the disclosed embodiments, the service is used to recommend products to users of a merchant's Web site. The service generates the recommendations using a previously-generated table which maps items to lists of "similar" items. The similarities reflected by the table are based on the collective interests of the community of users. For example, in one embodiment, the similarities are based on correlations between the purchases of items by users (e.g., items A and B are similar because a relatively large portion of the users that purchased item A also bought item B). The table also includes scores which indicate degrees of similarity between individual items. To generate personal recommendations, the service retrieves from the table the similar items lists corresponding to the items known to be of interest to the user. These similar items lists are appropriately combined into a single list, which is then sorted (based on combined similarity scores) and filtered to generate a list of recommended items. Also disclosed are various methods for using the current and/or past contents of a user's electronic shopping cart to generate recommendations. In one embodiment, the user can create multiple shopping carts, and can use the recommendation service to obtain recommendations that are specific to a designated shopping cart. In another embodiment, the recommendations are generated based on the current contents of a user's shopping cart, so that the recommendations tend to correspond to the current shopping task being performed by the user.

ART-UNIT: 276

PRIMARY-EXAMINER: Feild; Joseph H.

ATTY-AGENT-FIRM: Blakely Sokoloff Taylor & Zafman, LLP

ABSTRACT:

An apparatus comprising a storage medium and a communicatively coupled processor are presented. The storage medium has stored therein a plurality of executable instructions which, when executed, implement an information server which, upon receiving a request including a resource identifier for an information page that may or may not exist, constructs and issues commands to retrieve the requested information and dynamically generates instructions to create the requested information page for provision to a requesting client if the information page does not exist.
